DROUGHT RELIEF: 'FARM GATE' COUNSELLORS TO BOOST MENTAL HEALTH SUPPORT

Farming communities facing pressure in the wake of severe drought conditions will have access to 20 new 'farm gate' counsellors and frontline mental health workers as part of a $6.3 million commitment from the NSW Government.

Member for Murray Austin Evans today announced that people in drought-affected areas of Far Western NSW will now have more access to mental health support thanks to an injection of funding by the State Government.

"It is often difficult to seek help when living in remote and rural area, and this new funding will link people struggling with their mental health into services appropriate to their needs," Mr Evans said.

As part of the NSW Government's Emergency Drought Relief Package, the region was successful in receiving an additional $100,000 over two years to increase mental health literacy and support for people living and working in areas impacted by drought.

The initiative will build on the other mental health supports announced by the Government to help build stronger, healthier, interconnected and resilient communities.

New mental health positions, which build on the existing Rural Adversity Mental Health Program, will be based in the Western, Hunter New England, Murrumbidgee, Nepean Blue Mountains, South Western Sydney and Illawarra Shoalhaven Local Health Districts.

Minister for Mental Health Tanya Davies said the funding over the next two years will ensure individuals, families and businesses have access to 44,000 hours of crucial mental health support close to home.

"People with real experience of life on the land will lend a hand at events to start those conversations that might not otherwise be had. This is about reducing stigma, providing hope and support, and most importantly recovery," Mrs Davies said.

This funding commitment is on top of $4 million already being provided to regional NGO's to support communities facing natural disaster and drought. The NSW Liberals and Nationals Government's total commitment to drought is more than $1 billion.
